Attached herewith is a brief summary of certain points of interest discussed during the course of two meetings which SOURCE has had with KAMOR 1 after the latter's debriefing by Arthur J. Roney (see (S) 10382, 2 May 1961). It will be recalled that SOURCE had been in contact with KAMOR before Roney's visit, and in discussing the case with Roney, it was decided that there was no harm in SOURCE continuing the relationship. The material in this summary is for background information only. Any direct reference to it in conversations with KAMOR would, of course, probably compromise SOURCE.

1. The first part of the document is a list of names and addresses, which appears to be a directory or a list of contacts. The names are written in a cursive script, and the addresses are listed below them. The list includes names such as "J. B. Smith", "W. H. Jones", and "C. D. Brown", among others.

1. The first step is to identify the problem or question that needs to be answered. This involves understanding the context and the specific requirements of the task.

The "father" of the idea was SOURCE, who had been a member of the 14th to discuss the possibility of a German taking over Russia's flat after he left the country; as it would have the most favorable conditions in which to carry out his plan, which KAMMER thought would suit SOURCE's requirements rather well. SOURCE said "no" to this idea, as instructed by his C/C. During this meeting KAMMER also asked SOURCE if he could take him on a car trip of about three weeks to the Soviet Union with him and his girl friend. He said that he planned to rent a car for about $200 monthly kroner, and planned to make the trip with four people sharing the expenses. He suggested SOURCE take a girl or find another man. He told SOURCE that the trip would be long as lengthy as possible and that some money could be saved by their staying with his relatives in Lusk. He suggested two possible routes: one, through Sweden and Finland the usual way to Leningrad, and then on to Moscow and Lusk and back through Poland; the alternative was through East Germany and Poland to Prast, Lusk, Moscow, and return the same way or another southerly route. The trip could be accomplished for about $150.00 per person, according to KAMMER's estimate. SOURCE said that KAMMER felt so strongly about making this trip that he even offered to personally absorb any of SOURCE's expenses in excess of this estimated cost, within, as he put it, "several hundred kroner." KAMMER said that he would like to have SOURCE's decision about making the trip as soon as possible, and they agreed that SOURCE would consider the idea and give KAMMER his answer at dinner in SOURCE's flat on Monday, the 18th.

KANTOR also stated, that should this Russian trip not materialize, he would then probably make a short visit to Yugoslavia as his last look at Slavic lands before returning to the United States. He told SWAN that he planned to return home by ship about the first week in September and will attend the special language program at Fordham University. (This is the same program for which he failed to get a scholarship.) KANTOR said that it would be a difficult time for him financially, as the tuition alone for this course is $500 per year.

Teletype on 19 June 1961: During the course of conversation, SOURCE told KAMOR that he could not make the trip. KAMOR stated that he would then not make the trip, implying that it would be too expensive at this time to try to organize it along the lines mentioned at their previous meeting. KAMOR was still most interested to make the trip and to see Russia once more before going back to the U.S., according to SOURCE. KAMOR stated that he and his girl will now take the trip to Yugoslavia as an alternative. He was also most disappointed in the fact that he had not met JOSEF, a friend of Sam Kanor, the painter, who is working for KHRENNIK in Moscow. SOURCE subsequently reported that KAMOR and his girl left Copenhagen on 1 July bound for Yugoslavia via Munich and Venice.)

Thyriox Subject Discussed by Kwita2 and Scyphoz

US and Soviet Foreign Policy: KAMNER stated that Russia had honored all of her agreements at Malta and Potsdam, and that the US really had no legal rights in West Berlin, especially since Russia had moved out of the eastern Sector of the city - at least legally, he added. He feels that neither the US nor Russia is totally in the right. KAMNER stated that he was favorable to the US and hoped that it would soon begin to do something constructive, especially in our foreign policy, but that (here SCARLE is not absolutely certain that he interpreted KAMNER's meaning correctly) if Russia were the first to do the construction, it is, then he would have to side with them. SCARLE felt here that KAMNER meant that since the US has done nothing to alterate the situation, it is better to let the Russians do it.

Further Comments by SOURCE. SOURCE has stressed several times the fact that it was difficult for him ever to gain the confidence of KATZ although he himself is a Jew. SOURCE said he felt that KATZ had an inherent distrust of people whom he doesn't know extremely well and particularly if they are not Jews. SOURCE also said that one of the characteristics he noted about KATZ was his ability to be very vague about certain subjects and certain parts of his life. The source of this weakness, according to SOURCE, concerned KATZ's two trips to Russia. He told SOURCE that he started with little relief in mind on the basis of his wife's but became very reticent to discuss either of the trips in detail. SOURCE stated that this was one of the stranger things about KATZ; in that as time he could be so close to her son and yet would not talk about it.

SOURCE also stated that KATZ never seemed to have any friends or acquaintances who were Jewish. SOURCE stated that KATZ was very friendly to him and that he could tell a great deal about various things in his confidence.
